Core Questions

1. Was the website easy to navigate, and could you find the main pages without help?

Yeah, pretty easy. Booking and my reservations are under Plan Your Stay, and my boats and profile are under my name once I'm logged in. The only time I paused was adding a boat: I looked in Plan Your Stay first before I found My Fleet under my name. I liked that the boat card has a Book a Slip link right on it, though. It took me straight to booking with my boat already picked.

2. Were the instructions, labels, buttons, and forms clear and easy to understand?

Mostly. The password checklist that checks things off as you type is really nice, and the booking page with the numbered steps and the summary on the side made it super clear what was left. Two little things: the boat section on the sign-up form says Optional but Boat Name still has a red star, and the example text in the boxes (Jack, Sparrow, Tortuga) is dark enough that for a second I thought the form was already filled in.

3. Did anything on the website feel confusing, broken, hard to read, or inconsistent?

A few things. When I picked a start date in the past, the Reserve button just stayed grey and said "Choose a start date to continue," but I had picked one. It never told me the date was in the past, so I had to figure that out myself. After I made my account it dropped me on the home page and said welcome aboard, but I still wasn't logged in, so I had to log in again right away. My reservation also says Active even though it doesn't start until October, which threw me off a bit. And the numbers on the dock map are really tiny.

4. Did the main features work as expected (registering, logging in, making or viewing a reservation, updating account information)?

Yes, everything worked. Signing up, logging in, adding a boat, booking, finding the booking again, and changing my phone number all went through, and it told me each time that it worked. The price added up too: 45 ft × $10.50 = $472.50, plus $10.50 for electric, so $483.

5. What is one thing you would improve before the website is considered finished?

Log me in automatically after I make an account and take me back to booking. I clicked Book a Slip in the first place, went through sign-up, and then ended up on the home page logged out. Kind of lost my spot.

Follow-Up Questions

FIRST IMPRESSIONS / VISUAL DESIGN

1. When the Landing page first loaded, what was the very first thing you noticed?

The big sunset harbor picture and the orange Book a Slip button, which is what you'd want on a marina site. The photo looks more like somewhere in Italy than the San Juan Islands though, haha.

2. On a scale of 1–5, how professional or trustworthy does the site look?

I'd give it a 4. Everything looks consistent and put together, same colors and menu on every page. Just a few small rough spots keep it from a 5.

3. Were the colors, fonts, and images consistent from page to page?

Yep, it all felt like one site.

4. Was any text too small, hard to read, or cut off?

The dock map numbers are way too small to read, and the password checklist text is kind of light and small. Nothing was cut off though.

NAVIGATION

5. Could you find the page to book a slip within 10 seconds?

Easily, it's the big button on the home page and it's in the menu too.

6. Did you ever feel lost or unsure what page you were on?

Nope. The menu underlines whatever section you're in.

7. Are the menu/button labels clear?

Yeah. "Plan Your Stay" is a little vague, but once you open it you see everything.

REGISTRATION & LOGIN

8. Walk me through registering an account; were the error messages clear?

Clicked Book a Slip, got the sign-in box, clicked Register here. I typed a bad email on purpose and it told me "Enter a valid email address" right under the box, which was clear. The phone number formatted itself, which was cool. The only annoying part was ending up logged out after. Also, there's no "Forgot password?" link on the sign-in box. If I forgot mine I wouldn't know what to do.

9. After logging in, was it obvious what to do next?

Pretty much. The Book a Slip button is right there and my name shows up in the menu with my account stuff under it.

BOOKING FLOW

10. Did you always know what step you were on?

Yes. Steps 1 through 4 are numbered and the summary on the side fills in as you go and tells you what's still missing.

11. Did the site clearly confirm your reservation?

Definitely. Big check mark, confirmation number, dock and slip, start date, price breakdown, and a button to go to My Reservations. One thing: it booked right away with no "are you sure?" popup, but changing my phone number did ask me to confirm. Felt backwards.

12. Could you look up an existing reservation without help?

Yeah, Plan Your Stay → My Reservations. It just showed it without asking me for anything, and there are filters if you have a bunch.

ERRORS & EDGE CASES

13. Did you encounter anything that looked broken?

Nothing actually broken. The past-date thing was the closest.

14. If you entered something wrong on purpose, did the site tell you what to fix?

Bad email, yes. Weak password, yes, the checklist showed what was missing. Past start date, not really, the message didn't say what was wrong.

OVERALL

15. Would this site give a friend enough confidence to book a slip?

Yeah. Prices are right up front, the confirmation has everything you'd want, and you can find or cancel your booking later.

16. How did the site feel on your phone?

Good. The menu turns into the three-line button, the booking page stacks into one column, and nothing runs off the side.

17. How would you rate the page load speed?

Super fast, every page loaded basically instantly.

18. What's one feature you wished the site had?

A "Forgot password?" link on the sign-in box.

19. Describe the site in three words.

Clean, easy, calm.

20. Was there any point where you wanted to give up or ask for help?

Not really. The past-date message was the only time I had to stop and think about what it wanted.

Areas for Improvement

#	Improvement	Details
1	Tell people when the start date is in the past	The Reserve button just stays grey with a message about picking a date. Something like "Start date can't be in the past" would clear it up.
2	Log people in after they sign up	Send them back to where they were headed, like the booking page if that's how they got there.
3	Add a "Forgot password?" link	There's no obvious way to reset a password from the sign-in box if you're logged out.
4	Show future bookings as "Upcoming"	"Active" makes it sound like the lease already started.
5	Add a confirm step before booking	A "Book Slip 15 for $483/month?" popup, same idea as the one on the profile page.
6	Make the dock map easier to read	Bigger slip numbers and legend, or let people click to zoom in.
7	Clean up the sign-up form	Drop the red star on Boat Name since the boat section is optional (or explain it's only needed if you add a boat), and make the example text lighter so it doesn't look pre-filled.
8	Combine Mon–Fri and Saturday in the hours	They're the same hours, so "Mon–Sat 6 am–7 pm" would be simpler.
